Proclamation

Aphasia Awareness Month

WHEREAS, Aphasia is a disorder of the brain that occurs, most commonly, after a stroke or traumatic brain injury and affects a person's ability to communicate; a person with aphasia typically has difficulty with reading, writing and understanding what other people are saying, but the condition does not affect a person's intellect; and

WHEREAS, while widely under-diagnosed and often misunderstood, one-third of all stroke survivors are diagnosed with aphasia, most often by speech pathologists; although the condition is most common among older people, aphasia can be acquired by people of all ages following severe head and brain trauma; and

WHEREAS, it is estimated that one million people in the United States have aphasia, more than the number of people suffering from Parkinson's disease, muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis, or cerebral palsy; according to the American Stroke Association, among ischemic stroke survivors who were at least 65 years of age, 19% had aphasia; and

WHEREAS, there are varying degrees of aphasia that include: non-fluent or expressive aphasia, typified by a person's ability to speak in short, meaningful phrases that take a great effort to produce; fluent or receptive aphasia, typified by a person's ability to speak in long sentences that have no meaning, or include unnecessary or made up words, and difficulty in understanding others; and global aphasia, typified by severe communication difficulties and a person's limited ability to speak or comprehend language; and

WHEREAS, people with aphasia usually experience improvement over time, aided by speech therapy, rehabilitations services and counseling; however many people with aphasia are prone to depression, hopelessness and isolation, avoiding contact with others in order to pass on social situations that may lead to mutual frustration; and

WHEREAS, the Adler Aphasia Center, located in Maywood, New Jersey, was created when its co-founder, Mike Adler, suffered a stroke and could not find a local rehabilitation therapy program that offered the kind of quality care found at the few existing aphasia programs that he and his wife visited in Canada, England and other parts of the United States; and

WHEREAS, the Adler Aphasia Center is committed to empower, enhance and enrich the lives of people with aphasia and their families by providing an array of therapeutic, rehabilitation, respite and support services that address the unique social, emotional, psychological, curative and recovery need of aphasia patients;
